COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP)-William P. Murphy, faculty council chairman at the University of Missouri-Columbia, has defended the council's policy on campus problems.

Gov. Warren E. Hearnes, in a letter to Murphy Wednesday, Wednesday criticized the policy as discriminatory because some students were to get grades without having to take final exams.

Murphy, a law professor, writing to Hearnes Friday, said faculty members still have the final decision in determining class attendance, course requirements and grading.

"In the aftermath of Cambodia and Kent State, many universities across the country shut down completely for the remainder of the year. On still other campuses, students were given the right to choose among various options to class attendance. The position taken by the faculty council on this campus insisted that the university should remain open and continue normal operations.'

THE LOST ART OF POLITICAL INVECTIVE

What has become of political invective? Many observers would hasten to say that it is alive and well in the office and they really saw the Grand of Vice President Agnew. But to true connoisseurs of the verbal rapier thrust, Agnew's broadsides against "an the mid-19th century the State the view now and then from a effete corps of impudent snobs," "coalitions of choleric trying to purch a fire thrust. young intellectuals" and the "criminal left" have all the grace of a street mugging.

The mere fact that Agnew- or his speechwriter-- is being hailed as a master of political invective is a sure sign of the decline of the art. Henry L. Mencken once described the American language as "preeminent among the tongues of the earth for its eager hospitality to new words.. and its disdain for all academic obfuscations and Saturday, May 23, 1970 - Birth of Cris Casswell, restraints." Since those days, the American language has retreated into a twilight world of barbarisms such as "military- industrial complex" and "in- puts" and Perhaps the art of verbal assault reached its apogee in the 18th century. The corrupt Earl of Sandwich accosted John Wilkes, a political enemy, one day and told him: "You will die of a pox or on the gallows." Wilkes smiled Court ruling that churches will continue to be exempt and replied: "That depends, my lord, on whether I master of written invective of his day, wrote the Duke of Bedford: "You have done good by stealth. Along with the Common Law, the newly independent Americans inherited a passion for political invective from Britain. Not even George Washington was spared. In 1796, Thomas Paine wrote of him: The Aurora, a Philadelphia newspaper, hailed the President's retirement by saying: "The man who is the source of all the misfortunes of our country.... is no longer possessed of

The POWER of FAITH WOODI ISHMAEL

Man lives by faith. Without it he would die. Since the beginning of time his faith has led him to search for a spiritual union, the understanding of the mysteries of life and the acceptance of death. In the course of that search he has founded many religions, some of which have lived and some of which have died. The ones that have lived have had an influence on the world and on each other. The living influential religions have many simi larities and many differences, some of which are fundamental.

Along with the search for spiritual union, our world has grown smaller due to the speed of travel and communication. A hundred years ago there were people living in our country whose nearest neighbor was 24 hours away. Today our most distant neighbor is only 24 hours away and we can be in voice communication with him in a matter of

The population of our shrinking world is about three and one half billion people and increasing by millions every year. More than ever it behooves us to intensify our search for tolerance, understanding and unity that a deep abiding faith can give. In the next few weeks this column will review the influential religions of the world and their founders. In the light of our shrinking world it is imperative that unity and mutual responsibility must come to the defense of our common faith in the brotherhood of man.

Only the human eye can identify them positively. And then time is perilously short. So be ready.

When your Weather Bureau issues a tornado watch, look for the funnel, listen for its roar. If you see or hear it, and if there is time, report it instantly to the Weather Bureau.

When a tornado warning comes, you have run out of time. Move fast. Take cover below ground level or in a strong building. Be sure windows are open, but then stay away from them. Make yourself small. Shield your head. If you are caught outside, lie flat in the nearest depression.

Tornadoes kill-in seconds. So it you find yourself with too little time, use it well.

The Kodak Exhibit Center is Rep. George W. Parker, R-Columbia, says Missouri's nter itself, an exhibition their activities to the average level and the Colorama.

Business principles, not politics, should rule the U. S. Post Office. This opinion comes, appropriately, from people engaged first-hand in business management, the owners of independent businesses across the nation.

Businessmen, as a group, are most displeased with the quality of postal service, especially in view of recent rate increases. Now a poll by the National Federation of Independent Business indicates that 73 percent of the business owners favor Congressional legislation which would convert the Post Office Department into an independent, public corporation with power to over haul the huge, $8-billion-a-year enterprise.

The poll was conducted on legislation proposed by Representative Glenn Cunningham of Nebraska which would establish a Postal Service Authority with board management responsibilities, and freedom from Congressional politics. He is a member of the Post Office and Civil Service committee.

Civil Service committee.

Only 20 percent of the responding businessmen take a negative view of this bill, while another 7 percent reserve their opinion.

Missouri businessmen reply with 73 percent in favor of the proposal, 20 percent opposed and 7 percent undecided.

The proposal is similar to that made by the Administration, based on a Presidential commission study, and that passed by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee in March. It awaits House floor and Senate action.

Earlier this year, the Federation found businessmen opposed to a postage increase to reduce the postal deficit, now approaching $11½-billion a year. Since then, a larger increase in first-class has been proposed.

Most of the businessmen apparently agree with Representative Cunningham's objective: to remove present handicaps imposed by legislative, budgetary, financial and personnel policies. He maintains that modern management practices should be made available to provide the best service for the lowest cost. But, he says, Congressionally-imposed limitations on transportation contracts often prevent the most efficient and economic movement of mail.

The bill contains bylaws under which such a corportation would operate. Representative Cunningham sums up the advantages of these changes: it would strengthen top management; Provide needed capital for modernization through bond issues; clarify transportation policy; provide modern employeemanagement relations and an improved environment; and establish a system for setting reasonable rates.

The Kappel Commission on Post Office Reorganization estimated that, in time, an independent corporation could save 20 percent of postal expenses, and end the annual deficits. Most businessmen believe that any business losing money, year after year, should be reorganized.

Silent Sermons In many Church BY DON OAKLEY

Taking up the cause long championed by the late Sen. Everett Dirksen of Illinois, Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania has proposed a constitutional amendment which would permit voluntary, nondenominational prayers in schools and other public buildings.

Scott will undoubtedly discover, as did Dirksen, a solid core of support among many Americans who believe that a large part of what's wrong with youth and present-day American society is due to the absence of prayers and Bible reading in the schools.

In this respect, two surveys reported in the current "Psychology Today" magazine seem particularly pertinent.

seem particularly pertinent.
In one, the largest survey ever undertaken to examine the political beliefs of any body of clergymen, 1,580 California ministers from nine Protestant denominations were queried by three University of California sociologists.

"When we analyzed the results," write the researchers, "we began to see why Christian congregations have been so unshaken by years of semonizing. It turns out that whether or not people listen, there is not much to hear. Most semons rarely touch on controversial moral and ethical issues. More than a third of the dergy said that never in their entire ministries had they taken a pulpit stand on a political issue."

political issue."

They found that the more "traditionalist" a minister was — that is, the more he believed in certain basic doctrines such as the divinity of Jesus, life beyond death and the literal existence of the devil — the less interested he was in worldly problems and the more he emphasized the negative "thou shalt nots" of Christianity and ignored the positive "thou shalts."

Compared to the joys of the world to come, for the "traditionalist" the problems of war, race and poverty were not worth talking about.

"These findings appear dismal," conclude the authors, "for those who hope to awaken the churches to the urgent problems of modern society. So far as we can tell, Sunday mornings will remain the same, with America's silent majority sitting in the churches listening to silent sermons."

A second survey, of members of a Protestant church in a southern city, found two types of churchgoers: A tiny minority of "devotionalists," for whom religion was a central fact in their daily lives and an end in itself; and a large majority of "instrumentalists," for whom religion was a means to an end—important for its social benefits, as an occasional solace and as an ultimate ticket to heaven—and for whom the form of religion took precedence over substance.

form of religion took precedence over substance.
Significantly, the more "instrumentalist" a person was rated, the less compassionate and tolerant he was found to be toward his fellowmen.

It would be interesting to see the results of a nationwide "in-depth" survey on the question of prayer and Bible reading in the schools.

Would it find that those Americans falling in the "traditionalist" or "instrumentalist" categories are the ones who are most in favor of overriding the Supreme Court's ruling on the issue?

Could it be that what is really needed in America is not prayer in schools but more sincere prayer in the churches?

Some weeks ago this column introduced the phrase "sensible seventies" as an expression of our hopes regarding the development of the economy in this decade. It was meant to be more than a catch-phrase, since it has implications for the basic premises on which choices for national economic policy would be made.

Briefly, the thought is that

Briefly, the thought is that the government's fiscal and monetary position should not be varied frequently in response to short-term economic fluctuations, but should be kept on a relatively steady course. Instead of always trying to "do something" about immediate problems by fiscal and monetary adjustments, it is better to "just stand there."

The contrast between the two approaches to economic policy-making is especially critical at this point in the decade. For two years economic policy has been oriented toward cooling off the economy. We now see some results -- including a rise in unemployment.

Not surprisingly, there is now some sentiment that fiscal and monetary policy should be reversed. Having used it to cool off the economy, some say we should begin to use it to restimulate economic activity. Such a diametric shift in economic policy objectives would be in accord with the activist approach, but we fear its ultimate consequences would be severely damaging.

However, in advocating a steady course in economic policy we do not mean to urge that government should forever be frozen in the particular fiscal and monetary attitudes of this point in time (early April 1970). These may, or may not, be the appropriate steady courses to follow in the long-term future.

And so, we must raise the question: If economic policy is to "just stand there," where should economic policy just stand? This is really many questions, some of which we will list.

Does the "steady fiscal policy we have been preaching imply continuously running a small surplus, a small deficit, or is some other criterion of fiscal steadiness more appropriate? And just what budget concept should we use? The "unified budget" which has now become standard is not the only way, or necessarily the best way, to measure a surplus or deficit.

Does a steady monetary policy mean a constant growth in the money supply by a fixed percentage and, if so, what should the fixed percentage be? An even more difficult and controversial question is: just how do we define the money supply – are savings deposits, for example, a part of it?

We will not attempt to give answers to these questions for a very simple reason - we do not know the answers. This may make our advocacy of a steady course in economic policy seem like a very hollow idea. We are unable to define in any very precise terms what we are advocating.

are advocating.

However, if the reader will be patient, we hope to persuade him that there is substance to what we have called steady-course economics. It is not a new kind of dogmatism which lays down rigid rules for making policy choices in the future. It is rather a new concept of the desirable and feasible objectives which should guide such decisions.

The questions we have raised on how to define the appropriate steady course in monetary and fiscal policy can only be answered by a process of searching. The research work of academic economists will make its contribution, but basically the answers will have to be found from the lessons of experience as we go along.

The "sensible seventies"

The "sensible seventies" will not be a period in which economists are out of work (in case anyone has been worried) because decision-makers have locked the monetary and fiscal controls in fixed position and require no further guidance. Both basic economic reasearch, and day-by-day interpretation of economic events, will be needed as much as ever.

But in any process of searching the most important thing is the conception of what it is that you are searching for. We submit that in this respect the "sensible seventies" may be, and should be, quite different from the "soaring sixties."

In the past decade the search was for flexible policies which would iron out the short-term fluctuations in the economy. It was thought that when the economy was contracting we should use stimulative fiscal and monetary measures. When the economy was expanding too rapidly, with inflationary consequences, these policies would be reversed. From this point of view the trick was to know exactly when to switch from fiscal and monetary stimulation to restraint.

You will reach quite different conclusions if, as we urge, you approach the problem as one of designing policies that will be sustainable, and appropriate, over a wide range of different economic conditions. Your design may fall short of perfection and require changes as experience accumulates. But at least it will not contribute to economic instability by turning through 180 degrees whenever the business cycle is thought to be changing direction.

Although we have found it impossible to draw up the exact specifications for a "steady course" in economic policy, it is easy to see what "steady course" does not mean. Specifically, it may be contrasted with what actually was done in the past five years. In fiscal policy, the federal budget varied between a $25 billion deficit and a $3 billion surplus. In monetary policy the annual growth in money supply, from one year end to the next, varied between an 11.1 per cent increase and a 1.5 per cent decrease. It should not be hard to design a policy course that is steadier than that.

As this is written, political leaders of the activist persuasion are uncertain whether national economic policies should be fighting inflation or fighting recession. We suggest, respectfully, that it might be better if national policies didn't try to do either but simply to provide the continuing basis for sustainable economic growth at a stable price level.

An approach like this, if followed consistently, would mean less danger of inflation and less danger of recession. Inflation is often the aftermath of fiscal and monetary policies that were single-mindedly oriented toward counteracting unemployment in a prior period, and vice versa.

Short term economic instability, like some other national problems, is best dealt with by a policy of benign neglect.

Sometimes reform to combat one evil can open a Pandora's box of greater evils. This is the apparent reason why many U. S. businessmen fail to support legislation to unscramble the crazy-quilt effects of state taxation on companies operating in several, or many, states.

When a company is liable for taxes in several states, the result may be unfair. But a Congressional proposal to prohibit any state from taxing an out-of-state seller with no business location in that state gained support from only 36 percent of the businessmen polled by the National Federation of Independent Business.

The measure, introduced by Senator Charles Mathias of Maryland, is opposed by 51 percent of the responding proprietors, while another 13 percent take no position. The major concern of the dissenting businessmen appears to be the likelihood that local businesses would be at a competitive disadvantage if out-of-state sellers were exempt from sales, income and other taxes.

In Missouri, the business response was 41 percent for the legislation, 46 percent against it, and 13 percent undecided.

The legislation would prevent states from levying an income tax, sales, use or gross receipts tax on a company with no business locations in the state, or on a sales person who has no in-state business location or makes no household deliveries.

These exemptions, many businessmen fear, would give the out-of-state seller an advantage over local proprietors, encouraging door-to-door solicitations and firms operating with "independent" field sales representatives. (Mail-order business is now generally exempt under various state laws.)

Proponents of plans to limit state taxes on interstate commerce say that multiple taxation by states and muncipalities is unfair and creates intolerabel bookkeeping and compliance problems. It has become more acute as state and local governments have imposed new taxes to meet revenue needs.

taxes to meet revenue needs.

The business poll covered only the exemptions proposed for out-of-state sellers; the Mathias legislation also spells out a method of proportioning state taxes when a corporation economic instability by turning does have business locations in through 180 degrees whenever several states.

The proposed exemptions and reductions would reduce state income, and many businessmen anticipate that the state would then increase the taxes on its instate merchants to make up such losses.

Other solutions have been

Other solutions have been suggested. A Congressional body has recommended that firms operating across state lines should receive the same tax treatment from each state, instead of being subjected to conflicting requirements. Another idea is to prod states into general agreement on limiting tax liability on interstate firms. Federation researchers conclude that the problems of proliferating state and local taxes create a difficult tax reform problem.

The 19th Decennial Census will show that America has grown to a land of more than 205 million citizens, according to estimates by statisticians. The Statisticial Bureau indicates that some 203.7 million civilians and members of the armed forces will be counted in the United States starting April 1, when a staff of more than 160,000 workers will launch the official 1970 census tabulation.

In addition to the resident total, the United States is expected to have about 1.2 million members in the armed forces overseas and over 600,000 civilians outside the country. The new resident count will represent an increase of about 24.4 million in the decennial period, exceeded only by the gain of virtually 28 million in the preceding intercensal decade.

The 1970 nose-countin, latest in an unbroken series of censuses taken every tenth year since 1790, provides an important profile of the country's growth, determines the size of each state's Congressional representation, and provides basic facts for the annual distribution of billions of dollars of federal and state for the state's congressional representation.

The current census is expected to show few changes in trend from those of earlier decades. Most significant may be the record high decennial population growth in the South, in contrast to reduced gains in the other three regions of the country. In fact, the South, which has had a marked upsurge of white inmigrants, is expected to have about 63.7 million inhabitants as of April 1. Moreover, its anticipated 8.7 million gain during the 1960's will be well over that in any other region, surpassing the growth in the West for the first time since the 1930's.

Equally noteworthy, the 1970 census is expected to whow that California became the most populous state during the past decade. Apparently, California overtook New York around the end of 1963 and, as of their April, may have a lead of over 1.2 million residents.

The 1970 census is expected to confirm that our population continued to grow most rapidly in suburban areas, that growth virtually halted or even reversed in our larger cities, and that slow declines persisted on farms. It should also show that, in the population including the armed forces overseas, the excess of females over males has doubled to almost 4 million, with about three fourths of the current differential among persons at ages 65 and over.

Taxpayers who are telling all, or nearly all, this week rely on the Government's promise that tax returns are held strictly confidential. What are they to think when they learn that the President's investigative bird-dog, Clark R. Mollenhoff, claims authority to take a gander at any return he has a mind to?

Mr. Mollenhoff is strictly

Law and regulations, they say, provide that a president can delegate such authority only to department heads, and then only under exacting procedural rules designed to make inspection of returns

An IRS spokesman says the White House has requested inspection of tax returns in "less than a dozen cases." If that sounds like magnificient restraint, however, it must be noted that during Mr. Cohen's four-year tenure at IRS, in the Johnson Administration, the White House did not see a single tax return. Mr. Johnson and Mr. Nixon are a good deal alike in their instinct for rough politics. If Mr. Johnson could get along without peeking at income tax returns, Mr. Nixon

The governor also has recommended enactment of a new state drug control law, as proposed by Attorney General John C. Danforth - who pointed out that drug abuse reached dangerous proportions in Missouri endorsed by St. Louis County rosecuting Attorney McNary.

Narcotics control legislation is pending in Congress, but there is a general feeling among law officials that regulations are needed at the state level to handle drug violations which might not be covered by the federal law.

Other changes asked by the governor would:

'No' on Carswell---Favor to Nixon? by Don Oakley

The worst mistake President Nixon could make mistake would be to consider Senate's rejection of nomination of Judge Harrold Carswell to to Supreme Court as a personal affront, or to attempt to characterize it, as he did in a letter to Ohio Sen. William B. Saxbe, as a challenge to the constitutional prerogatives of the presidency.

It was no such thing. The constitution clearly requires the consent of the Senate to presidential candidates for the high court and other specific offices. Whether the Senate's action on the Carswell nomination was wise or foolish may be subject to debate; that it was the fulfillment of a terms that really count --human terms -- Apollo 13 was a resounding success. Their lives in greater ardy than any astronauts before them, with only the still operable lunar landing module standing between them and slow suffocation in space, astronauts Lovell, Haise and Swigert arced the crippled Apollo around the moon and carried out a crucial fourminute rocket burn to head them back to earth and a "routine" splashdown in the

-Not before many tense uncertain hours were endured, however. But by bringing the peopole of the world closer together in a together in a closer common, shared concern during those hours, Apollo 13 achieved perhaps its greatest success of all.

Britain, France, Russia dozen nation's offered the use of their ships or any other facilities to aid in the rescue of the astronauts, three men who had temporarily strayed beyond the planet. If only the nations could co-operate with such urgency in rescuing the planet itself, with its three BILLION passengers, from the dangers threatening them.

In terms, of its original goals, of course, Apollo 13 was a failure — a $375-million bust. Undoubtedly, many people will now argue that since we have already proved that we can go to the moon, let's leave well enough alone and spend well enough alone and spend the money on earth.

Others ask why no provisions for space rescue have ever been devised. Another future benefit from Apollo 13 may be to spur efforts in that direction.

But short of having a duplicate booster and duplicate crew standing by throughout the launching and recovery of every mission, all that can be done today is to make sure that every conceivable contingency in provided for in flight plans, that emergency procedures are well-practiced during training and that enough redundancy is built into equipment and life-support systems that when something does happen, the chances of disaster are

This planning and these ocedures, plus the great good luck in that the lunar module was still attached when the service module was put out of commission, are what brought Apollo 13 back home.

Rather than make us shrink from further exploration of space, it should give us more confidence than ever that this is something man was meant to

18 Years of Service

U. S. Senator Stuart Symington, who came back to Monroe County Saturday for a visit and to make a talk at the annual meeting of the Cannon dam and lake association, has ably represented this county, state and nation for almost eighteen years.

During that time, he has become known as one of the best informed Senators at Washington, not only in many other nations of the world. He has become one of the foremost authorities on Vietnam and Southeast Asia and the problems they present to Americans. His opinions are widely quoted and respected on many questions in addition to those about Vietnam.

He is one of the most outstanding Senators Missouri ever had.

From the local standpoint he has rendered service that has been invaluable on behalf of Cannon dam and lake project. He was in the Senate when the project was reactivated in the 1950s and immediately did everything he could to further it. He continued to do so. He has been instrumental several times getting proposed appropriations approved, and a times in having suggested appropriations raised larger figure.

The Senator is one of three men then at Washington who pushed for the project. The others were the late Congressman Cannon and the late Sen. Thomas Hennings, As the only remaining representative in Washington who started with the project, nis opinions on the matter are listened to and respected by his Northeast Missourians, and especially those in Monroe County, where he has opened all his campaigns, are not only deeply indebted to him, but also consider him a friend and sort of an adopted son.

LIBERALS' LEGACY OF DIVISION

There is general agreement that the nation is divided as never before but no agreement never before but no agreement at all about the underlying causes for the sharp cleavages.

Some of the surface explanations include: The frustrations of the Vietnam war, the breakdown of families and the church and the failure of government to respond to the needs of the people.

In the estimation of many thoughtful observers the seeds of divison in the United states were planted by the Liberals in the Democratic party many years ago and have been nurtured to fruition for political gain.

It was the liberals who first recognized and capitalized on the vote-getting potential of minority groups. They took the labor movement under their wing and passed legislation that has enabled the labor bosses to hold almost dictatorial powers today.

They vigorously nursed the farm bloc, again approving special iaws that set the farmer apart from other Americans. Farmers, however, have fallen out of ranks because liberal-planned farm programs have failed dismally.

The liberals appointed themselves as the saviors of black Americas only to founder again as their promises outstripped their performance.

The by-product of this overemphasis on economic and social class distinctions was the development of frictions that pitted one American against one American against another.

class tended Bach solidify and work solely for its own benefit – and the Democratic party repeal parallel benefit.

Along with this creation of a conglomerate of minorities the liberals introduced a new doctrine best discribed as permissiveness. It extended all the way up to the United States Supreme Court It reached its high-water mark during the later years of the Johnson Administration, as highly - placed publid officials acquiesced to the anarchist acquiesced to the anarchist doctrine that it was all right to break laws if they were considered univer considered unjust.

We heard for the first time that individuals were not responsible for their actions. Rather it was an oppressive society which was to blame.

Thus armed with a license to break the law and infringe on the rights of others, certain far left activist groups began mass demonstrations that evolved into riots and open defiance of all authority.

To think in terms of what was best for the nation or how certain actions might affect other Americas, not included in the new power blocks, was considered unspeakably right wing, and disloyal to the cause The idea was to work was to work completely and unswervingly for your own group.

It was inevitable then that the more militant fringe would turn against the government itself. Thus we see the campus New Left turning to violence against its arch-enemy, "The Establishment," which is any form of authority that interferes with "doing their own thing."

Crimes committed by individuals also rose at an unprecedented rate following introduction the of instice.

the late 1960s counter-reaction began to make itself felt and culminated in the election of President Nix on.

But the power blocs and the New Left continue to function, still dedicated to the politics of power and division. And they are still cultivated by the Democratic liberals who hope to regain the White House in 1972.

This is the dilemma disunity that faces the President. He has the "silent majority" with him but the vocal minorities continue operate as entities within themselves, striking out against the public and the government

Lapse
During the last regular session of the General Assembly, members made horrendous mistake in agreeing that the state would collect municipal sales taxes in cities where the levy was approved by voters. Just why the state should collect a purely municipal tax escapes us, any more than it would be logical for the Missouri Highway Patrol to collect fines for municipal traffic violations.

The question did not arise as any major complication until citizens in St. Louis, the largest city, recently voted to levy an extra sales tax for municipal purposes. At that point, city officials brought out the measure enacted in the Seventy-fifth General Assembly and pointed to the forgotten clause requiring the state to collect the levy for the

It will cost nearly one-half million dollars - $477,000 to be exact - to collect these new municipal sales levies, and this is just the first estimate. We're certain the figure will increase the moaths and years ahead. Allthough the state receives a percentage of collection, the cost will hardly cover the extra manpower, offices and administrative expense that will be incurred.

certain Bootheel citizens are happy to see their state tax dollars going to collect municipal taxes in St. Louis.

A Storyteller Departs Erle Stanley Gardner was not a literary master or a legal genius. He was a superb storyteller.

Almost anyone alive has heard of Perry Mason, Donald Lam and Bertha Cool, all Gardner creations.

Gardner gushed fiction so fast and prolifically that he had to use the pseudonyms of A.A. Fair, Carleton Kendrake and

Charles J. Kenny.

At 80 he is dead, and his departure leaves a void for the publishers of mystery novels, paperbacks, and magazine pieces. Gardner's death also is going to cut some holes in TV

He was a one-man gold mine where fiction and mystery plots were concerned.

But don't forget something else about Erle Stanley Gardner. While he ground out the prose he also kept himself well-informed about well-informed about law-enforcement and courts. And he was constantly commenting on crime and

The writings of Gardner have no landmark value, but they have done two important they've entertained things -- they've entertained, and at the same time clarified the processes under which we impose and dispose justice.

NOW . . . A CYLINDER CHOPPER that merits the Gehl name!

A cylinder cutterhead is the heart of this new Gehl "300" chopper. Nine knives whirl at 1000 RPM to cut and throw material with each razor-sharp slice. Standard tungsten-carbide faced knives and cutterbar. built-in knife sharpener. No feeder apron. Crop attachments pivot with the feed-in mechanism—the opening is always perfectly aligned with feed rolls, providing steady, even bites to the knives. Three attachments available: hay pick-up, one-row, and a two-row that handles both wide and narrow rows.

What is a 'Printer?

A PRINTER IS A TRADESMAN AND AN ARTIST

He is a tradesman because he works in blue jeans and gets his hands dirty on the job. He is an artist because the printed page which is his finished product is indeed a thing of beauty and a work of art.

A PRINTER USES TYPES AS AN ARTIST USES PIGMENTS

Bodoni, Clarendon, Garamond, Mistral, Spartan - the printer knows them all, and how to combine them into an eye- pleasing whole, as the artist combines colors. Few printers have what is known as "higher education," but they all seem to have academic knowledge. Like master grammarians, they know how to break a long and difficult word at the end of a line, whether to place quotation marks inside or outside a period, and how to phrase a wedding invitation correctly.

NO ONE THINKS OF PRINTERS AS MATHEMATICIANS

But they can calculate and measure spacing down to the minutest fraction of an inch, in order that a page may have perfect symmetry and balance.

PRINTERS ARE MEN OF PRIDE

Some men who work with their hands have a deprecatory attitude toward their trades and longingly wish for more exalted jobs.

PRINTERS ENVY NO MAN

You never met one yet who wasn't proud to say

..."I am a Printer!"

* We here at the SIKESTON STANDARD are indeed proud of our craft and are eager to show you how we can make PRINTING serve you more effectively.
